Political Reminiscences of Some of New York's Well-Known Men.

ick Brown Tells About Two Politicians Whose Names Were Dennis.

The Stoop of a Republican Primary Door Pulled Away With a Hawser.

One Faction Had Voted; the Other Couldn't and Was Defeated.

Alderman Nick Brown, of the Second Assembly District, is by long odds the handsomest member of the present Municipal Legislature.

He is a "solid man," too, having through sixteen years of application developed at ondway and Cortland street a lucrative ousiness—that of making by hand the boots and shoes of nearly all the business men of

The brown-whiskered and bright-eyed hands, and he could control more voters hands, and he could control more voters hands, and he sould control more voters hands anyway.

But Shea's men voted slowly, very slowly, and it was getting well on towards time for the polls to close when the end of footwear is the hand-made product of a dozen skilled knights of the last, whose pegging makes music from the workroom adjoining the sales rooms.

The Alderman lives, and has lived since his carliest days, in James street, and there's not much in the history of the old Fourth and Sixth wards that he doesn't lower Broadway.

CHERRIES. In order to reduce him to a properly re miniscent mood, the Evening World's most incient reporter, dropping in at the hand nade shoe store, began :

'Alderman, you remember old Clancy. the compounder, who used to make 'cherry from wild cherries and alcohol? Had his place in Centre street, just south of Reads street? Before Centre street was cut through, and folks had to reach Chambers street by going around through Cross street, now called Park street, you know!" The Alderman slowly, doubtfully, shook his head.

"Why, yes; you remember one year, along in the forties, when the new crop of wild cherries came in, old Clancy dumped out into the gutterless street a lot of cherries that had done duty in alcohol for a year. The hogs that were wandering in the street came and feasted on the alcoholsoaked wild cherries and got as drunk as biled owls! You remember that don't

"Do I look like a Methuselah?" de manded the mild-eyed and candid Chairman of the Aldermanic Finance Committee

"I've heard that tradition about the hogs and the cherries, but it was only a tradition when I began to be an individual. I can emember back-well, away back to the time when Dennis Shea and Dennis Mo-Loughlin had their great fight for supremacy in the Republican primary at Shakespeare
